(U) San Francisco – 12 Officers Hurt Attempting to Break Up Hostile Crowd

(U) Twelve police officers in San Francisco were injured early Tuesday morning as they tried to break up a large "hostile" crowd that was throwing bottles and fireworks at them, the department said. Officers responded at about 12:39 a.m. to the area of 24th and Harrison streets and found a large crowd and a fire, police said. Officers declared the gathering an unlawful assembly and ordered the people to leave "due to the risk of public safety and property," police said. Members of the crowd proceeded to throw glass bottles and set off "explosive devices" in the direction of the officers, police said. All 12 officers experienced ringing in their ears, according to police. Two of the 12 also suffered minor burns from debris from an "exploding device." All of the injuries were considered non-life threatening. Officers eventually managed to clear the crowd, and firefighters doused the fire, police said.
